Special thanks to Michal Rutkowski and David Stewart for their precious guidance and support.

Over the past two months, the number of countries that have planned, introduced or adapted social protection measures in response to COVID-19 has quadrupled – and those measures eightfold. As of May 15, 2020, a total of 181 countries, 10 more than last week, have a total of 870 social protection measures (figure 1). Details on such measures are available in the country briefs section of the paper. This week's new countries and territories include Afghanistan, Maldives, Micronesia, Northern Mariana Islands (US), Papua New Guinea, Qatar, Solomon Islands, Timor-Leste, Vanuatu, and West Bank and Gaza.

Social assistance transfers are the most widely used class of interventions. These non-contributory programs account for 60.1% of global responses, or 523 measures (table 1 and figure 2). Among safety nets, cash transfer programs account for half of intervention by governments, with their 264 COVID-related measures representing one-third (30.3%) of total social protection programs.

Both cash-based and in-kind transfers have been growing steadily, with cash accounting for a much larger number of measures. While cash only accounts for half of overall social assistance, this is because other measures such as public works and utility waivers also account for a significant non-cash share (26.5%). Cash-based measures are over twice those of in-kind programs (figure 3). About 56% of cash transfer measures (148 out of 264) are new programs in 104 countries, while one-fourth of measures (24.6%) are one-off payments. A significant number of new in-kind programs (83) has been introduced, accounting for about 69% of total in-kind measures.

Figure 3. Cash-based and in-kind transfers measures over March 27-May 15, 2020

Cash transfers include programs of various duration. The duration of programs ranges from 1 to 6 months, for an average of 3.1 months (figure 4). In some cases, programs are tied to the duration of the crisis, hence with uncertain duration. This is the case, for example, in Morocco and Tuvalu.

The size of cash transfers is relatively generous. Current transfers account for an average 27% of monthly GDP per capita in respective countries (the highest increase, or 47%, is registered in low income countries). On average, transfers have more than doubled (+134%) compared to average pre-COVID transfer levels (where data is available for a subset of 17 countries) (figure 5). Mongolia’s Child Money Program is increasing benefits from about MVT 10,000 in pre-Covid time to MNT 100,000.

Social assistance has been adapted to COVID-19 response in three ways. This includes expanding coverage, increasing benefits, and making administrative requirements simpler and more user-friendly. Specifically, administrative adaptations are occurring in 41 countries (figure 6). For example, anticipation of payments that due at later date (e.g., Malaysia); flexibility in the time of collection (e.g., Algeria); home delivery of cash for seniors (e.g., Armenia); postponement of recertification (e.g., Georgia); waiving of conditionalities (e.g., Philippines); and sharing of delivery systems across programs (e.g., Jordan). Increases in benefits among preexisting programs are implemented in 45 countries, including transfer value being increased in 45 programs (e.g., Egypt) and additional payment cycles taking place in 18 programs (e.g., Chile). Coverage extension is underway in 157 countries: this includes expanding coverage of existing programs (23 cases) and 362 new social assistance programs (6 of which universal). Combined, those adaptations across administration, generosity and coverage in social assistance benefit over 1.7 billion people (individuals). The same estimate applied only applied to cash transfers lead to an estimated 1.3 billion people benefiting from such adaptations. If we only consider coverage (horizontal expansion) of new and existing cash transfer schemes, these cover an estimated 890 million people.

Since last week, there are no updates on reported number in coverage extension, with cash transfer programs more than doubling (143%) in coverage relative to pre-pandemic levels. Preliminary analysis for a subset of cash transfer programs with comparable data allowed to estimate the scale up of programs relative to pre-COVID19 coverage (figure 7). Countries like the Philippines and El Salvador are quadrupling their coverage (in the case of Philippines also via multiple new programs), while even countries in Africa like Mauritania are almost doubling coverage.

In terms of social insurance, there has been a remarkable uptick in measures recently – now including 236 measures in 117 countries. Among the most popular interventions, social security contributions have been waived or subsidized in 56 programs – a level similar to paid sick leave measures (52). Unemployment benefits are present in 69 cases. Table 2 and the adjacent figure lay out main interventions.

Table 2. Social insurance program type	N. of measures	N. of countries

Pension	47	34
Social security contribution waiver/subsidy	56	49
Unemployment benefit	69	55
Total SI programs	236	117

The number of labor market interventions is over triple digit. Interventions are now a notable 111 in 74 countries. Wage subsidies continue to dominate those interventions (table 3 and accompanying pie chart). As discussed in the previous editions, there is considerable diversity in generosity and accompanying conditions. Alongside wage subsidies, 14 countries are strengthening their active labor market programs, particularly intermediation services and skills training. Labor market regulations are being adapted in 20 countries.

New analysis shows trends and composition in regional measures. ECA has the highest upward trend, with LAC accelerating in recent weeks. Sub-Saharan Africa has been on a steady raise, with North America relatively flat. Social assistance accounts for most of Africa's Covid-related response, with the largest share of social insurance appearing in higher-income countries of North America and ECA. East Asia's composition shows the highest share of labor market programs globally (figure 8 and 9).

There are no updates since last week on spending. Countries are spending an average of $44 per capita in social protection COVID-19 response. Our preliminary estimates indicate a level slightly higher than half-trillion (567 billion) in US dollars. Importantly, not all countries report on cost figures, and some are planned volumes. The bulk of spending includes universal or quasi-universal cash transfer programs in countries like Japan and the United States. Social assistance spending equals $516 billion, $488 of which in HICs. For the moment, LIC are investing $247 million in social assistance, while MICs about $50 billion ($23 billion of which in India). Defined in these terms, the overall global volume of social protection response to COVID-19 is 0.6% of global GDP (nearly $85 trillion). In terms of per capita spending, countries are providing an average of $44, ranging from $1 in LICs to $99 in HICs.

In terms of “how” countries are implementing social protection programs in response to Covid-19, this edition offers a special feature on emerging delivery practices in relation to select cash transfer measures. Next week we will continue this examination, with a focus on payments.

One of immediate challenges to scaling up cash transfers in response to COVID-19 is to accurately expand the list of beneficiaries. A total of 111 countries responding to COVID-19 include an expansion of cash coverage. The two most common ways of expanding the number of cash transfer recipients are (i) to add households from existing social registries and (ii) accept applications on-line and/or with mobile applications. A third approach, far less common, is to use the presence or absence in other large databases to identify new eligible individuals or households. Whichever approach is used, new beneficiaries must be informed that they are eligible for benefits. The most common method is to use mass communication to instruct people to check their status through an on-line or mobile application. This process is facilitated when an identifier known to the individual such as mobile phone number or national ID number allows access to this information. In some cases, an automatic message is sent through the phone provider indicating eligibility status and other program information (e.g. Pakistan and planned in Zimbabwe).

Globally, 57 countries have a social registry of some form, with median population coverage of 21 percent of the population. Coverage ranges from a low of less than 5 percent of the population included in the registry (e.g., Burkina Faso, Chad, China and Sierra Leone), to nearly universal coverage. Chile, Philippines, Peru, Pakistan and Egypt all have social registries covering more than 75% of their respective populations (figure 10). Countries with higher social registry coverage can more quickly identify new beneficiaries and can often transfer emergency benefits directly to individuals digitally, with the wide use of mobile phones and the increasing coverage of bank accounts and mobile money accounts.

There is diversity in how countries are attaining higher levels of coverage. Table 4 indicates how selected countries were able to temporarily add cash transfer beneficiaries as part of their COVID-19 responses.<sup>1</sup> Five of the countries leveraged their social registries either by expanding the share of eligible people based on their ranking (Ecuador and Pakistan) or by cross-checking with other databases (Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Pakistan and Peru). This was possible for three reasons: (i) the social registries in these countries covered at least two thirds of the population and more than 75% in Chile, Colombia, Pakistan and Peru; (ii) between 85 and 99 percent of the population has a unique ID, ensuring that individuals were not receiving the same benefits more than once or ‘double dipping’; and (iii) social insurance data on formal sector employees such as wages were available and included the unique ID number to allow the data to be linked.

Note: (1) For India, the databases included women with basic bank accounts (200 million) and construction workers (35 million). (2) All of the countries except Thailand provided additional benefits to those already receiving social assistance. (3) Argentina and Morocco also used on-line self-registration and cross-checking to add informal sector workers as beneficiaries. (4) Contributors to social insurance as share of working age population, World Bank pension database.

<sup>3</sup> As of now, India doesn't have a national SR but the country is developing a number of state SRs which will cover country-sized populations.

The social registry-based expansions had the advantage of avoiding any new application or enrolment processes<sup>5</sup>. Instead, people were informed through mass communication campaigns combined with websites where they could check whether they had been declared eligible. In the case of Pakistan, people were told to send a short message to a number and an SMS response would confirm their eligibility. The major limitation of this approach was the fact that some of the registries were not up to date. Both Colombia, Pakistan, and The Philippines were in the process of updating their social registries after several years Ecuador decided to address gaps in its social registry by adding an additional 100,000 households using census data to find households in poor areas that had not already been included.

Six countries – Brazil, Ecuador, Jordan, Philippines, South Africa, and Thailand – used new application processes to add beneficiaries. Thailand, which has various cash transfer programs but does not use a social registry to determine eligibility, targeted informal sector workers and set up a website to accept applications. More than 28 million people applied, corresponding to about half of the working age population. Brazil combined the social registry and application methods. The application-based process was highly automated in Brazil, Jordan and Thailand. These countries had the advantage of digitized administrative data that allowed for quick cross-checking of key variables like wages reported to the social insurance agency or income tax records. Jordan had just implemented its National Unified Registry (NUR) which brought together data from land and vehicle registries as well as social insurance.

An important issue related to this type of data sharing or ‘data aggregation’ is the extent to which it violates privacy or personal data protection regulations. While consent may be part of the application process, most individuals will not be aware of how their data are being used. Moreover, they are not in a strong position to object thereby possibly foregoing the transfer. In Colombia, the government authorized public and private entities to share data but issued a decree mandating that they could only be used for this purpose and guaranteeing their confidentiality.

The options available to governments struggling to provide financial relief to people in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic are a direct function of their existing delivery systems. The quality and coverage of the identification system, social registries and the databases used by social insurance, social assistance, tax and other agencies are important assets towards generating a list of new beneficiaries, whether through an expansion of a social registry or a new application process. The next section highlights five country cases in more detail to illustrate the commonalities and some differences depending on country context and available systems.

Most of the countries among those in the first wave to expand the coverage of their cash transfer programs were able to leverage existing registries and good identification systems that covered the vast majority of the population. Most low-income countries will not have the same advantages but may be able to take advantage of high rates of mobile penetration or strong local government presence. The crisis has highlighted the need to address gaps in coverage and in particular, the large ‘missing middle’ that falls between social assistance and insurance. As in other areas, reforms aimed at addressing short run demands could lead more inclusive and resilient social protection systems. The following paragraphs will dig deeper into countries’ experiences with coverage expansion in practice.

<sup>5</sup> In the case of Ecuador, the social registry approach was used to add 800 thousand households while census data is being used to find an estimated additional 100 thousand households in poor areas not yet registered.

Brazil (based on note produced by Rodrigo Ortiz D’Avila Assumpcao as part of the G2Px initiative)<sup>6</sup>

The program called “Emergency Aid” is a new cash transfer program intended to provide emergency COVID-19 support to informal workers (registered in the CadÚnico), individual microentrepreneurs (MEI), self-employed workers with informal incomes (not contributing to social security) and the unemployed. In addition to unemployment status, eligibility is determined according the following:

- Age must be over 18;
- Compliance with CadÚnico criteria: total household income must be less than US $598 (3 times the minimum wage) or the per capita household income must be below US $100;
- Does not benefit from any social security or assistance benefits, unemployment insurance or any other federal income transfer program other than Bolsa Família;
- Annual taxable Income in 2018 was below US$4,915.05.

Caixa, a major public Bank, has established a website<sup>7</sup> and a mobile app for applications. The app and website allow citizens to request, check the status of the application, and provide additional information (upon request). Another feature of these channels is that, after registration, the applicants receive a code through SMS. The code is required to open a Social Digital Savings Account, which is one of the mechanisms to receive the Emergency Aid.

Citizens that were included in the CadÚnico database until March 20th and who meet the eligibility requirements of the Emergency Aid, will receive the Aid without having to register on the Caixa website or app. Citizens that receive Bolsa Família can receive the Emergency Aid, as long as the Aid amount is higher than the Bolsa Família payment, for these beneficiaries Bolsa Família payments will be suspended during the Emergency Aid payment period. Citizens that are entitled to the Aid but were not included in the Cadence database until March 20th can register on the auxilio.caixa.gov.br website or through the app. The Emergency Aid will be granted to up to two members of the same family. In families headed solely by women the payment is doubled, reaching US $234.

Once requests are compiled, DataPrev is responsible to determining eligibility. The application process for the benefit is heavily supported by cross-checking data between previously existing databases. Usually this takes around 3 working days before eligibility is determined. DataPrev reviews eligibility by cross-checking the 73.4 million records on CadÚnico, and the 33 billion data entries in the National Social Information Database (CNIS) hosted by Dataprev.<sup>8</sup> CNIS includes all labor-related data, such as salaries, information on employers and social security contributions, receipt of social security benefits as well as the citizen’s tax number<sup>9</sup> and the enterprise’s tax number<sup>10</sup>.

After Dataprev completes the cross check, the data is sent to the Ministry of Citizenship for verification. DataPrev has already finalized and reviewed 32 million applications (received between April 7th and 10th). From this: 15.2 million were considered eligible; 11.6 million require registration review; 3.5 million were classified as ineligible; and 1.7 million need additional processing<sup>11</sup>. After review is done the data on eligible beneficiaries is sent by

The process to determine eligibility relies on the information for approximately 2.5 million households included in the Social Registry database. This database is managed by the Social Registry Unit, which provides information to Ministry of Social and Economic Inclusion (MIES) and other government ministries which are responsible to determine eligibility of beneficiaries. It works under the supervision of the Secretaria Técnica del Plan Toda una Vida that plays the role of coordination in the social protection sector. The Social Registry includes static socioeconomic and demographic information from Ecuadorian households.

In 2018, the Government initiated a comprehensive census sweep (RS2018), aiming at improving the quality and timeliness of the information. As RS2018 is not yet complete and given the urgency to respond to the COVID-19 crisis, the Government has assigned emergency benefits using RS2014. MIES defines the criteria to identify households as beneficiaries. Given the sanitary crises and the prolonged period of economic slowdown, MIES has recently decided to complement the social registry information with an additional source, to identify additional 100,000 households living in extreme poverty. This additional source has information on consumption patterns per region.

Jordan (based on note produced by Harish Natarajan, Guillermo Galicia and Ragheb Budeiri as part of the G2Px initiative)<sup>13</sup>

Jordan is in the process of developing its Social Registry, the National Unified Registry (NUR), based on the expansion of the National Aid Fund (NAF) database for vulnerable population and the Takaful program<sup>14</sup>.

The emergency aid is directed to daily wage workers affected by the COVID-19 crisis and uses the same mechanisms implemented for the Takaful program. Workers apply through a webpage (<https://reg.takmeely.jo/>) and are required to provide information on previous participation (as beneficiaries) on the Bread Subsidy Compensation program, national ID number, national ID card number, and an e-wallet mobile phone.

By April 18th, more than 290,000 heads of the family had applied to the emergency cash transfer. NAF verifies applicant information and updates the existing beneficiary information automatically using cross-verification enabled by NUR<sup>15</sup>, which includes data from multiple government entities, including: NAF, the Social Security Corporation, the Civil Status and Passports Department, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Department, the Income and Sales Tax Department, the Stock Exchange, the Land Registry and the Ministry of Finance- Retirement Administration.

<sup>14</sup> The Takaful program aims at providing health, financial and education support to 85,000 Jordanian families by 2021.

<sup>15</sup> The Jordanian National Unified Registry (NUR) was established under a WB project. Its first implementation phase finalized in January 2020.

Pakistan (based on note produced by Amjad Zafar Khan as part of the G2Px initiative)<sup>16</sup>

The Ehsaas Emergency Cash program aims at helping the vulnerable population in Pakistan cope with the ongoing coronavirus crisis. The financial assistance under the program is meant to help them buy food rations.

Existing beneficiaries of BISP are automatically informed about the additional emergency cash being given to them. They do not need to re-apply. For ‘new’ beneficiaries, the government launched a national communication campaign through newspapers, TV, radio and community announcements advising citizens who consider themselves eligible for the emergency cash to send a short message (SMS) on #8171 to check their eligibility. In the event of their being eligible, they receive an SMS message informing them of nearby payment points to collect money. In addition, an Emergency Cash Application web-portal has been developed enabling families to register themselves without the need to visit any office. The deadline for applications ended on April 19, 2020.

Eligibility of new applicants (non-BISP) is determined through two mechanisms: (a) through the NSER database by increasing the eligibility cutoff score beyond the score used for BISP beneficiaries; and (b) through development of lists of deserving families (whose data does not exist in NSER database) at district level. Beneficiaries identified through both mechanisms are then subjected to application of specific exclusion filters using administrative data (e.g. government employment, ownership of motor car, foreign travel history etc.). In addition, NADRA (National Database and Registration Authority) also verifies the applicant families through the civil registration database maintained by it. This two-level verification is designed to minimize fraud and inclusion/exclusion errors.

BISP has a comprehensive Case Management System (CMS)/Grievance Redressal Mechanism (GRM) in place since 2012 that is available to both existing and potential beneficiaries as well as community members. The system comprises of a web-based application that provides access to BISP staff right up to the tehsil (sub-district) level. It assists the BISP operational teams to receive and address, among others, beneficiaries’ complaints. For the Ehsaas Emergency Cash Program, the existing CMS/GRM would be accessible for existing and new beneficiaries to personally lodge appeals/complaints through various means such as post, email, telephone calls to a toll free number or by visiting either the BISP Headquarter, 6 regional offices (located in the provincial/ regional capitals) or more than 375 Tehsil offices of BISP all across the country. The grievance/complaint resolution authority has been devolved from the BISP Head Office to the tehsil level interface, ensuring that resolution time is quickened and beneficiaries are provided with a more personalized environment while tracking. The system is online and all offices are linked on a real time basis to process these requests. Both internal and external action committees have been set up to address attempted corruption or malpractice complaints received against BISP staff or contracted vendors. Over 3 million complaints/appeals have been received by BISP since 2012 with 90% being addressed within 72 hours.

Peru (based on note produced by Fiorella Risso and Douglas Randall as part of the G2Px initiative)<sup>17</sup>

The country has launched 2 programs in response to the COVID-19 crisis: Yo me quedo en casa (I stay home) for the poor and vulnerable and the Bono Independiente (Temporary Bonus) for the self-employed.

For the Yo me quedo en casa program, the Peruvian government utilizes the National Household Register of the Household Targeting System (Sisfoh, Sistema de Focalización de Hogares) containing information on households in poverty and/or living in geographical areas with high health vulnerability defined by the Ministry of Health. Sisfoh covers more than 80% of the country's population. Eligibility for the subsidy Yo me quedo en casa was established based on the information available from Sisfoh. The subsidy is provided for households and collected by a member from each home, mostly women in-between 18 and 60 years old. The register with the total number of households that will receive subsidy is approved by Ministerial Resolution. Subsequently, it is uploaded on a platform "Yomequedoencasa" enabling beneficiaries to review eligibility using their National Identity Card (DNI) number and the date of birth.

With regard to the "Bono independiente" program for the self-employed, the Ministry of Labor has also targeted the beneficiaries based on their information included on Sisfoh cross-verified with different administrative databases. As the subsidy is meant to support formal and informal workers, a methodology was applied to minimize exclusion and address the lack of information due to informality. For this purpose, the registry was composed of households in which members have an income of less than 1,200 PEN, according to the National Superintendency of Tax Administration (Sunat) and the Superintendency of Banking, Insurance and AFP (SBS). Additionally, households are removed in which members are on public or private sector payrolls, according to the Ministry of Labor, or have a contract with the public sector, according to information from the Ministry of Economy and Finance. The resulting beneficiary database is approved by Ministerial Resolution and sent to Banco de la Nación (a state-owned bank) which is responsible for the payment.

About this review

This 9th “living paper” edition contributes to the global knowledge on how countries are responding to the pandemic by documenting real-time actions in a key area of response – that is, social protection measures planned or implemented by governments.

For the purpose of this review, we organized interventions by social assistance, social insurance and labor market programs. For the latter measures, we deliberately focused on supply-side programs (e.g., mostly wage subsidies and other activation programs). In most cases, data sources include official information published in government websites, while in many cases we reported information from global and national news outlets. In some cases, information was provided directly by country-based experts, while the full database was validated and integrated by regional and country social protection teams at the World Bank and UNICEF. Overall, findings should be considered preliminary, subject to change, and as such interpreted with caution.

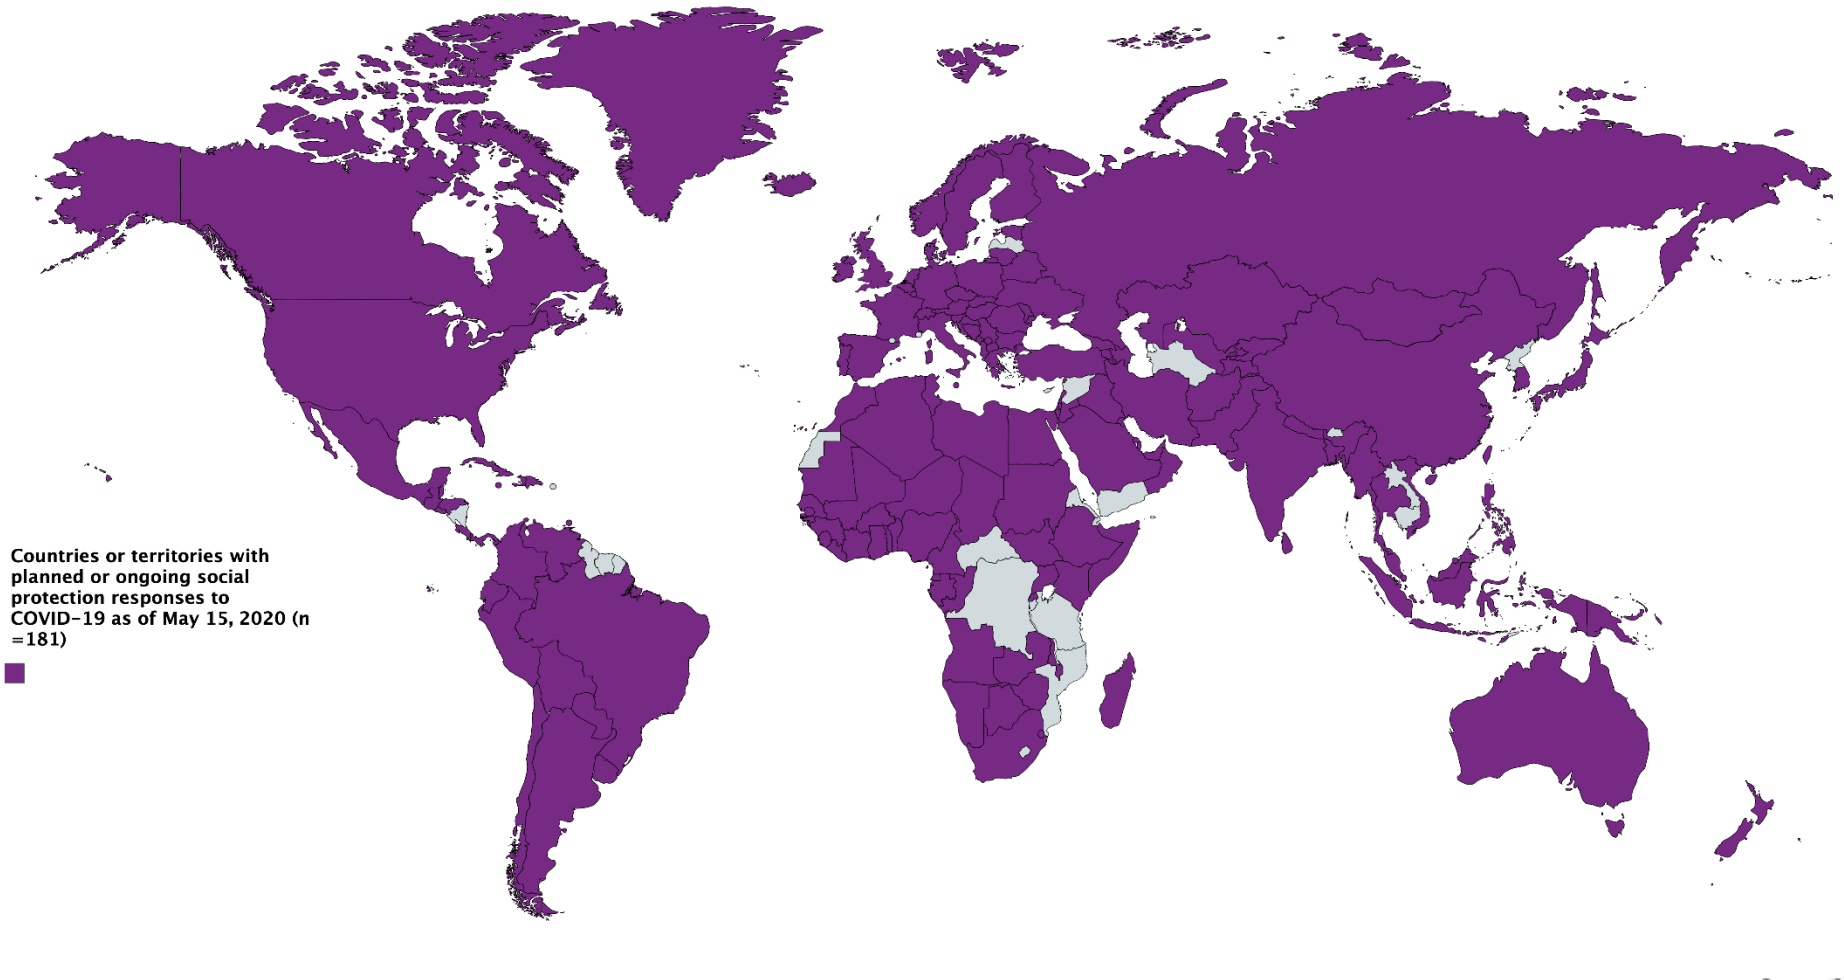

The information on country-level measures presented in this review is continuously verified, triangulated and enriched, with updated versions being released on a weekly basis (i.e., every Friday) until further notice. This would help provide a “situation room” with a view to inform decisionmakers, practitioners and the broad public about the most recent policy and operational developments in the sphere of social protection responses to COVID-19.

The reminder of the note zooms into a country-by-country examination of measures presented in tabular form. The structure by social assistance, insurance, and labor interventions is accompanied by more granular reporting of specific schemes and their summary description. Sources are provided as weblinks in footnotes. This is preceded by an “at a glance” overview of broad categories of programs present across social protection.

Wage subsidies

- Wage subsidy of 50% of the wage of apprentices and trainees from January to September 2020; the subsidy is up to AUD 21,000 per person and for a total cost of AUD 1.3 billion.
- Australia is providing a wage subsidy (so-called “JobKeeper payment”) for all permanent, part-time and casual workers who have worked for at least a year with their employer and were employed as of March 1, 2020. It is up to AUD 1,500 (USD 909) per two weeks for a period of six months, which is around 70 percent of the national median wage. Firms must show major reductions in turnover to qualify, which is 50 percent reduction in turnover for large firms and 30 percent for smaller firms. This is expected to cover around 6 million of the 13 million strong workforce.<sup>43</sup>

		The GoB has created three new temporary cash transfer programs Bono Familia (BF), Bono Canasta Familiar (BCF) and Bono Universal (BU) that together provide economic support for households impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. Initially two cash transfer programs were designed – BF and BCF – that both rely on a temporary increase of the value of existing social protection interventions to meet the additional needs of the current beneficiaries (vertical expansion). <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• BF is expected to directly and indirectly cover 65.3 percent of the population and the transfer amount is Bs $ 500</li> <li>• BCF is expected to indirectly and directly cover 23.9 percent of the population and the transfer amount is Bs $ 400. By design, it mostly reaches the elderly (86.2 percent of the population 65 years or older), but also pregnant women, mothers of children below 2 years old, and people with disabilities accessing subsidies.</li> </ul> Despite significant inclusion errors of BF and BCF, the GoB introduced a third program, the Bono Universal, in order to minimize the exclusion of informal workers and self-employed. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Bono Universal is estimated to directly and indirectly cover 46.5 percent of the population and the transfer amount is Bs $ 500.</li> </ul>

		Together, BF, BCF and BU are expected to reach 3.3 million households and their 11.1 million members (comprising both direct recipients and indirect beneficiaries, who are other household members), or 97.9 percent of the entire population.

Wage subsidies

- The kingdom is subsidizing wages for employees in the private sector up to 60% of their wages<sup>301</sup>. Instead of terminating the contract of the Saudi labors, an employer is now entitled to apply for the General Organization for Social Insurance (GOSI) and request a monthly compensation payment for his labors of 60% of the wage registered in GOSI for three months, up to a maximum of nine thousand riyals per month, and up to a total value of 9 billion riyals
- The government will pay the minimum salaries of independent workers in the transportation sector who are registered with the Public Transport Authority but are not under the umbrella of any company, whose activities were affected by the precautionary measures (KSA continues to be on 24 hours curfew till further notice: no taxis, no Uber or Karim is allowed).
